AGILITY OF THE GOVERNOR

BOYLE has turned another flip flap by notifying all political parties that he will not consider himself under obligations to any of them for whatever share of success he obtains at the polls. He might save himself a lot of worrying by stopping right where he is for he has no chance of ever coming across as a candidate for second term. The primaries will settle his future definitely and serve as a lesson to those who believe they are superior to the organization that makes them. Boyle has always refused to remain hitched. Nevertheless he was always willing to accept the aid of party machinery to boost him towards the goal of his ambition. He was not loath to accept the support of the liberal Democrats when he first felt the buzzing of the political bee in his belfry and rushed headlong into a pledge that he thought would land him in the saddle. He hobnobbed with the liberals and assured the divorce colony of Reno that he saw no reason why the gates of Nevada should be closed to ladies who irked the bonds of matrimony and yearned for an easy release. During the campaign Boyle criticised others for Puritanical restrictions and gave his most solemn assurance that, if elected, he would see that no limitations would be placed on business. Scarcely had the seat of the executive chair been warmed than Boyle turned around with a change of heart that amounted to a complete recantation of his ante-election pledges. The first week of his incumbency was marked by an effort to plant a set of wires to insure his re-election four years hence. He espoused the cause of the strait laced, the suffragettes and the alien interests which do not contribute to the support of the state. This action was radical enough to win the deserved reprobation of decent people but it is as nothing to his latest contortion in which the governor declares that henceforth he will not be under obligations to any political party, that he will do as he pleases and make the race according to his own fancies. Boyle is about as stable as a weathervane and not nearly as useful. He is willing to step on the shoulders of other men in order to vault into high places but the issuance of the latest decree at this time will consummate the comedy that has been enacted at the Carson City capitol for the past four years. Boyle is a dead one whose last act will be with the undertaker.

Willard says he is prepared to meet any fighter at any old time. He should first show what he can do in a bout with the Hun instead of playing sideshows in a circus.

When one reads the newspapers of San Francisco and Los Angeles and discovers the number of firms advertising for men at $2.50 and $3.00 a day it stands to reason that everybody cannot find employment at the shipyards. Tonopah's five-dollar minimum scale still challenges the best outside pay.

General Byng has the chin of one of the battle monsters he devised to offset the German gas attacks. His fighting face is one that spells determination.

Working in the mines gives a man exemption from military service as the draft law expressly exempts those engaged in the production of gold.

All is not gold that glitters and the distant enchantment of war work is not to be compared with the profit of living in Tonopah.

California enjoys another holiday today. This has grown to be a chronic condition that suits the easy going Native Sons.

WHAT'S IN A NAME

THE Chicago Tribune contains an illuminating story on the abuse of Irish names which may be taken as an example of the frequent appearance of Celtic cognomens in police annals. The article follows:

Authorities of Montana have been faced with a puzzling situation in rounding up disloyalists, for many of the persons suspected of being unpatriotic bore such names as Sullivan, Murphy, Mulligan, and O'Brien, but instead of being Irishmen were Austrians, Russians, Bulgarians, and Turks.

It was discovered that this situation was brought about many years ago when thousands of foreigners bearing names almost unpronounceable were asked by employment agents at mines, ranches and railroad yards to adopt American names.

At that time Irishmen predominated as leaders of section gangs and miners and they rechristened the workers to match their own tastes.

Into the great melting pot stirred by the Irish section boss stepped the Russian and he came out smiling as Patrick O'Grady. Then followed the Austrian, who came out Mickey O'Flanagan, and the Bulgarian, who was known thereafter as Dinny O'Toole.

And the practice grew until the Irish, judging from names, led the field.

A miner would call at the office for his money.

"What's your name?"

"Patrick O'Shaughnessy."

"Where were you born?"

"Constantinople."

"All right, Pat, here's your pay."

But the war has changed things. Government agents and state vigilance officials have been keeping keen watch on many of these false Irishmen. It is seemingly impossible to rechristen the aliens now and every new case needs a new explanation.

"I suppose you still find old arrowheads when you plow your field?" "Not any more," replied Farmer Cornstossel. "We cleaned them all up long ago. Now we don't find anything but golf balls."—Washington Star.

Walter C. Lamb Issues Statement to Voters on Senatorial Nomination

The following statement is issued by Walter C. Lamb, Republican candidate for United States senator, to the citizens and voters of Nevada:

"I was prompted to enter this campaign, feeling deeply that the activities of Congressman Roberts are so inconsistent with the record of Nevada for loyalty and patriotism, that unless he makes a more satisfactory explanation to his constituents than has thus far appeared, his record, far from entitling him to promotion to the United States senate, should cause his unconditional retirement by the people of Nevada.

A Native of Nevada

"The espousal of this cause by me represents a serious personal sacrifice, which I cheerfully make in the interest of vindicating the reputation of Nevada as the Battleborn state, that still seriously means and lives up to its motto, 'All for Our Country'."

"I was born and raised in Nevada and since boyhood have been thrilled by its proud record of patriotic achievements in supporting President Lincoln and the union in the great civil war. Congressman Roberts' record, thus far wholly unexplained, in voting for the infamous McLe-more resolution, then against the United States entering the war; and after we had dedicated our country to war, his work and votes against the conscription act, and his other similar activities, cannot but result in impugning Nevada's standing for loyalty in the view of the other patriotic states of the union.

Greetings to Labor

"I have worked as a laborer in many capacities since boyhood in this state, and have had occasion in later years to employ large numbers of men. As an employer of labor, it is a pleasure to be able to say that the relationship between my men and myself has always been pleasant and agreeable. I have found that when the laboring man, either individually or in the mass, is treated as a human being should be, there is little trouble in establishing a feeling of friendship and co-operation between employer and employee, which cannot but result in mutual benefit and cordial understandings.

"At present the Tonopah Miner, of which I am the president and principal proprietor, employs a force of men, every one of whom is more my partner than my employee. During all my experience in connection with this enterprise, I cannot recall a single misunderstanding or the expression of one unkind word on either side. And I firmly believe this ideal condition can be carried into practical execution between employer and employee everywhere.

"It is gratifying to note that great progress has been made during recent years towards the accomplishment of this most desirable end. The day of the brutal, insolent employer is rapidly passing. He has learned that this policy is both inadvisable and impossible; inadvisable, because the simple truth has been firmly established that the average laborer is a man with a heart of gratitude and loyalty, which, in response to fair and decent treatment, expresses itself in better and more efficient service; and an arrogant policy has been found impossible because the laborer who patiently endured abusive treatment in the past will not stand it from the devil himself any longer.

"It is a pleasure to reflect on these facts, and to realize that the employer quite generally has begun to look forward to the recognition of Labor day as an event in which, with the man who works, he will share as a co-operator and a friend—a sort of 'fifty-fifty' celebration of a new basis of good will and reciprocity.

"WALTER C. LAMB."

A Consistent Nevada Booster

John Brooks, editor of the Nevada Federationist, pays a glowing tribute to Mr. Lamb for his services to labor, in the following words:

"Mr. Lamb, since becoming connected with mining enterprises in southern Nevada some fourteen years ago, has been an extensive employer of labor in the camps of Tonopah, Goldfield, Manhattan, Wonder, Fairview, Rhyolite, Rawhide and other sections of the state. He has personally been the means of bringing enormous sums of eastern money into the state for the development and equipment of mines, the construction of mills, etc., and has devoted much time and money towards advertising the resources of Nevada, particularly mining, throughout the United States. The pleasant relationship that has always existed between him and the hundreds of men who from time to time have been in his employ is a convincing demonstration of his understanding of the psychology of labor in the mass, and his sympathetic appreciation of the human element involved.

"Mr. Lamb recently announced his candidacy for the Republican nomination for the office of United States senator, and in the event of becoming senator should be well qualified to champion the rights of labor whenever affected by national legislation.

"Mr. Lamb was born in Reno, Nevada, forty years ago, and since completing his education in Nevada schools, which he attended from the kindergarten through the state university, has been actively identified with the development of the resources of the state.

On the Reclamation Act
 "He spent several years in Washington as private secretary to Senator Newlands and enjoyed unusual privileges and opportunities for thoroughly familiarizing himself with all the details of the work of a United States senator. He was intimately associated with Senator Newlands during the development and final passage of the national reclamation act, of which the late senator was the author. Mr. Lamb's work and study on the subject, which took him into all parts of Nevada, supplied him with an intimate knowledge of agricultural conditions in Nevada, and the necessity for aid from the federal government in solving many of her problems which are beyond the possibilities of private capital. He believes the reclamation act should be made more liberal so as to lend greater aid to the home-builder and encourage greatly increased desirable immigration to the end that a more rapid development of our agricultural resources may be facilitated.

For the Relief of Mining
 "Mr. Lamb also declares, in the event of his election to the United States senate that he will work untiringly for the relief and assistance of the miner, whose needs he knows intimately, and for the expansion of the general mining industry on which he has concentrated his time for many years."

CARSON DOLLARS PAY MARINES

Wednesday of the week past was payday with the U. S. naval reserves at San Pedro and a big bunch of silver dollars, with the mint mark, CC, 1890 and 1891, was distributed to the sailor lads. These coins had never been in circulation before and aroused no little interest among the boys, being doubly welcome to a native of this city and eliciting many inquiries from the lads from other localities.—Carson News.
